Proclaim April as Autism Awareness Month

Autism Awareness Month shines a bright light on autism as a growing global health crisis. According to a recent report by the United States Centers for Disease Control (CDC), nearly one in 50 children in the United States have been identified with an autism spectrum disorder.

Autism spectrum disorders are a group of developmental disabilities that can result in major social, communication, and behavioral challenges. Early identification and intervention can help a child access services and learn new skills. However, most children are not identified until the age of three and do not access services until the age of four. Studies have shown that African-American and Latino children are less likely to receive early diagnosis and linkage to services and are often diagnosed two years later than their counterparts.

The different activities surrounding Autism Awareness Month help to increase and develop knowledge of the autism epidemic and impart information regarding the importance of early diagnosis and early intervention. These activities also help to drive much needed funding for research and resources to Los Angeles County's most vulnerable residents.
